Previously, we had shown that glyoxal induces DNA damage selectively in rat colonic epithelial cells and that the damage is primarily formed de novo during glyoxal metabolism. In the present study, we compared the formation of deoxyguanosine (dG) lesions in a colonic epithelial cell line (FHC) and a non-colonic, fibroblast-like cell line (MRC-5) during the exposure to the same concentration of glyoxal and suggested that the colonic cell line is more vulnerable than the fibroblast-like cell line. That the amount of deoxyguanosine lesions formed during glyoxal metabolism in colonic epithelial cells is at least three- to fivefold higher than that in fibroblast-like cells. Following exposure of cells to 5-8 mM glyoxal, the ratio of deoxyguanosine lesions to 8-oxo-7,8-dihydroguanosine lesions was much higher in FHC than in MRC-5 cells. It was also found that the formation of single-strand breaks in DNA was higher in FHC than in MRC-5 cells, with a difference of about 2-fold. In colonic cells, the initial phase of the repair of glyoxal-induced damage takes place during the first 2 h after the exposure, whereas in fibroblast-like cells the repair takes place at a much slower rate. These results suggest that glyoxal selectively damages colonic cells and that the extent of damage varies depending on the cell type.

Q: Maximize Geometry Columns in SQL Server I have a query that outputs a table like this: The first column is the Company Name. I'm trying to figure out how to maximize the area of each Company Name so that it is largest. I do not have control over the company names - they are hard coded. Any ideas on how I can do this? Thanks. The result of the query is the name of the company, the sum of all

---Kix2Exe-Server is the main server software. A remote server may be used in which case a local RPC client is used to communicate with the server. Kix2Exe-Server allows remote clients to remotely connect to the Kix2Exe-Server, to manage the application, to set the Kix2Exe properties, to control all the applications and Kix2Exe components running on the machine. And all the information is downloaded to the client, without any need of a network connection. The client can be used to remotely control the Kix2Exe-Server from a client side. The server applications are listed on the client sidebar for easier management and control. A user may first download the Kix2Exe-Server, then add the applications to the sidebar. Then a local RPC client may be used to remotely connect to the Kix2Exe-Server to remotely control the applications and Kix2Exe-Server. Alternatively, a user may first install the Kix2Exe-Server, then add the applications to the sidebar. Then the application and Kix2Exe properties may be changed locally on the client to control the applications locally.
